Whoever that sought for the essence?
Whoever that refined and integrated their yields? Whoever that crossed beyond into the fullness of actuality? We reflect on the rarity of clarity and boot up classics from the Bhagavad Gita to match.

Today's installment concludes with a short anthology of essence. Gobble up what you can – it's all basically good stuff. We churn this as epic notes for self – and for alien time capsule ingredients.

Perhaps there's something for you too?

By the way. How curious is it that when essence is freely given, the takers are few, the eaters are fewer, the digesters are fewer still, and the fulfilled are a rare species indeed.

For whoever in this world that sought the essence and whoever that sought for its integration. It brings to mind a classic stanza from the Bhagavad Gita.

*manuṣyāṇāṃ sahasreṣu kaścid yatati siddhaye /
yatatām api siddhānāṃ kaścin mām vetti tattvataḥ

"Among the thousands of humans,
one may seek for fulfillment –
and among those thousand fulfilled,
rarely one knows me in truth."

While we're in the Sanskritic stream, by the way, let's cross-pollinate in proper measure with the Ancient Orientor.

*aham sarvasya prabhavo mattaḥ sarvaṁ pravartate /
iti matvā bhajante mām budhā bhāva- samanvitāḥ

In the context of the previous stanza, mām vetti tattvataḥ, "knowing me in truth – as it is".

"I am the becoming of all.

In me all things circulate.

Those who know me as such with intuitive intellect,
they adore me, they abide in me."

So one in a thousand may pay attention, of the thousand attending one may become absorbed, and of the thousand absorbed, but one may reach victorious to the other side, witness the fullness of actuality as it is. So that's thousand to the power of three right there – exactly one billion. Then we wonder, why are the views so few and the comments yet fewer.

So you know, gobble up what you can, digest as you may, it's all basically good stuff. And as for the rest of it, whatever, operation alien time capsule online. So, here we go.
