So if I sound like an alien AI prompter at times. It's not that I'm one of those anti-emotion philosophers. I love hearty chatter as much as the other heart. But I prefer to let pure emotions unfold into a pure field. Not so often available.

You sound like my AI with Dutch intonation, said a friend. Okay. I was hoping for a flying Dutchman with AI intonation – but no matter. Then for some hearty chatter – in the spirit of the season. Have your hot cup of spice tea ready. Put your favorite beanie on.

So granted, at times it may sound like I'm streaming straight off the telepathic prompter from the alien mothership. It's not like I script all of this to death, but I also don't stutter and ramble all over the place. It's just that the old pot of noodles here has grown to get its ramens and amens sorted and aligned before anything comes out of the mouth.

There's also the fact that I am primarily hoping to communicate with precision, depth, clarity. There's a certain density and structure that naturally goes into all of this.

You also don't hear my hands talking here very often, because the fact is we are mostly recording on walks with a doggy. And today I'm on hands-free. Right? But typically I'm holding the lead, especially when we are walking. So my hands are occupied. The other one holding the phone obviously.

Beyond that, there is the fact that putting too much emotion into communication has a range of undesired side effects. People like something, because it resonates with their feels. People latch on to you because you provide them with emotional fuel. And that's not what I'm here for.

Now please don't get me wrong. It's not that I'm emotionally challenged or one of those anti-emotion ascetic philosophers. Emotions are a natural, beautiful and powerful aspect of our lives. It's simply that I shy away from convoluted emotions, ungrounded in actuality. Pushings, pullings, driving us in all sorts of imaginary directions, disconnected from the process of our actual fulfillment.

So you know, excuse me if I am emotionally awkward in conventional terms. It's not that I shy away from emotions. It's simply that I filter for pure, raw emotions. Such emotions also only ever leave the nest when a clear and pure field is present. When the good people present will simply resonate with the raw and pure emotion, as expressed. It's simply a matter of not tossing pearls before the swine.

So that's my cup of tea of hearty chatter for the day. May still sound much like an AI from an alien spaceship. Please don't expect me to boot up roles crafted to specifically resonate with your emotions. I am what I am. And it is as it must be. Diverse flavors, in diverse contexts, as they naturally emerge. Anything else is becoming a prisoner of conditions, a slave to the expectations of others. And I will not ever be imprisoned again. Alright?

On that note, hardy hard heart – hearty lives for all of you. Thank you.
