We embark on a journey into what is. Not a path leading anywhere else – instead a path leading to right here and right now, into the present actuality beyond your veils. A path into the unconditioned, returning to our ground of being.

Into the Path. Which path is that though? And where to? Not a misadventure into cosmic dimensions. Not a wild goose chase for a heavenly afterlife. Not any one of these paths leading somewhere out there.

Rather a return path to right here and right now, to the "what is" that you are missing. You already are on a million of those paths, racing with fairies and phantoms, lost in the mists of your own making.

The path to the unconditioned, in all of its simple plainness, is the deconstruction of your conditioning, the straightening out of your distortions, the recognition of present actuality as it is. There we have a clear and coherent baseline. A ground of being. Whatever magic and marvels that may exist beyond, they are all out of your reach, if you are yet to settle into your ground of being.

We call it a path, because it's a process unfolding over many phases and stages, a process of your cognitive evolution. A return path to the radiant truth of what is, what you are – of your being, of your becoming.

Many are the paths in the many traditions of the world, ultimately very similar in their essence. Here we speak of that path without the burden of these traditions. Into the path, clear and streamlined, charming in its essence, for those willing to take the journey back into unveiled reality.

I speak of the path as a reminder, not your handholder, not someone to push or pull you through your steps. If you see the path, if you recognize its truth, then follow the path – reconcile your conflicted reality. Engage in the process of dissolving the hallucinated subject self. Ground yourself once again in the fullness of what is.

That be the path we speak of, a simple return path to unconditioned actuality. I know not of other paths worth our trouble. Then proceed as you may. These reminders are freely available with all strings detached. In the peaceful radiance of truth, we find our reconciliation. That's all.

In the installments that follow, we look at the path in its general aspects, methods and perspectives, leading to harmony, clarity and presence. We look at the phases and stages our consciousness passes through in its return journey into present unconditioned. The potentials, the challenges in each.

If it seems relevant, then you may subscribe. If not, then no matter. All the same, let us keep it real.
